New Mexico Business Coalition Calls on Governor to Protect Employers From a Tax Increase Caused by COVID-19

New Mexico (March 17, 2020) — New Mexico Business Coalition (NMBC) today announced that it is calling on Governor Michelle Lujan Grisham for assurance that the recent Public Health Emergency Declaration will not only protect the public and workers, but also employers. The governor’s emergency order is being used to waive medical care costs to the public and waive existing rules for employees to receive COVID-19 related unemployment benefits. To protect businesses during this health crisis, the rules which increase unemployment taxes employers pay based on the number of workers who file claims and the balance of the state’s reserve fund, should also be waived.

The New Mexico Department of Workforce Solutions employs a formula for business payments that uses a multiplier based on employee claims charged against an employer over the past three years. There is also an additional ‘Excess Claims Premium’ that is applied to employers with ‘high benefit claims,’ which increases the amount of unemployment tax even more. With numerous events cancelled and businesses being forced to limit operations, large scale reductions in hours available to employees will occur and necessarily cause a surge in employee unemployment insurance claims.

NMBC President Carla Sonntag said, “Governor Lujan Grisham’s Public Health Emergency Declaration makes it clear that New Mexicans will be held harmless for any COVID-19 related medical charges and that rules for workers to receive unemployment benefits will be waived. The same ‘hold harmless’ emergency protection and waiver of normal rules needs to be extended to employers who could otherwise be hit with enormous unemployment tax increases for the next three years.”

NMBC has contacted Governor Lujan Grisham’s office regarding this matter and is awaiting her reply.
